

Marta Encinas-Martín

Education Gender Ambassador at the OECD

She serves as the Education Gender Ambassador at the OECD, advocating for gender equality within educational spheres, with a special focus on influencing equitable career choices.

In her role as Senior Advisor for the OECD's Global Relations and Cooperation directorate, she leads partnerships development and fosters collaborative initiatives among governments, private sector and other international organisations, focusing in the in the Latin American region.

Marta worked previously at UNESCO, where she played an important role in shaping the global education landscape through her contributions to the Education for All international program. During this time, she was instrumental in establishing ambitious goals and implementing effective measurement strategies to track progress in education for developing countries.

International Conference: The future of girls in STEAM
13-14 December, 2023